

Publisher's Note

Dear Readers,

As we step into the second half of 2026, we find ourselves building up the voices that define our region. Publishing in Southeast Asia means learning to create connection across distance, languages, and lived realities, and it is this very challenge that continues to make our work meaningful.

These next few months bring a list as vibrant and varied as the region we call home. We are delighted to share ten adult fiction titles that explore the many shades of love, identity, and human connection; nineteen works of adult non-fiction that spark conversation and illuminate the world in new ways; and a Children's boxset crafted to inspire wonder in readers of every age. We are also proud to present two powerful translations, books that remind us that the heart of a story can resonate far beyond any one language.

But numbers alone cannot capture the spirit behind these books. This season celebrates the authors who carry Southeast Asia's storytelling legacy forward; seven Malaysian writers whose work adds new dimension to our shared narratives; sixteen Singaporean storytellers who continue to explore identity, history, and belonging with clarity and nuance; two Indonesian and six Filipino voices rich with emotional and cultural power. Their stories, each in their own way, remind us why this region matters so deeply to us.

Among the most awaited releases are Colony by Ratih Kumala, translated by Dalih Sembiring in August, holding up a mirror to the power plays and intrigues of the human world; Birthmark by Ong Chin Huat in November, a contemporary literary novel about identity, class, and the moral cost of survival, following identical twin sisters separated at birth.

The books we bring into the world form a living archive of Southeast Asia; its tensions, its joys, its contradictions, and more. They carry the emotional truth of our people and the complexity of our histories. At Penguin Southeast Asia, we publish with the conviction that when writers from our region are supported and celebrated, they help redefine what global storytelling can look like.

Warmest wishes,
Nora Nazerene Abu Bakar

Kyra Ysabel

Kyra Ysabel is a Filipina author who writes heartwarming romances filled with humour, hope, and the unexpected twists of love. She is the self-published author of the Magnolia Heights series, an ongoing contemporary romcom collection that has resonated with readers across social media. Born and raised in the Philippines, Kyra draws inspiration from culture, connection, and everyday magic. By day, she works as a data officer; by night, she writes stories fuelled by her love for storytelling, her husband, and their joyful toddler.

The Love Letters of Via Lullina

Would you dare to fall in love if you knew how your story ends?

Lost in Florence, Filipina writer Isla Mendoza stumbles upon a mysterious bookshop on Via Lullina, a street that isn't supposed to exist. Within its walls, she discovers an old book filled with enchanting love letters—and one addressed to her.

The letter is from Luca Rossi, a man Isla has never met. Too curious to let it go, she tracks him down, only to discover a grumpy Italian chef who thinks she is out of her mind. Destiny? Foretold by a magical letter? With love as the plot twist? No, grazie.

Drawn to the book for their own reasons, Isla and Luca begin an investigation. The more the pair try to resist, the more the book writes. What will happen when they reach the last page?

15 Grams

A family struggles to cope with the tragedy of a teenager on Changi Prison's death row for a crime she did not commit

Set against the growing pains of a nascent Singapore in the 1980s, 15 Grams chronicles the circumstances behind eighteen-year-old Gitanjali 'Li Li' Mistry's arrest after she is found with 15 grams of heroin, the minimum threshold for the mandatory death penalty. While Li Li's family struggles to deal with the fate that has befallen their youngest, most beloved member, Li Li grapples with her demons in prison, likewise struggling to cope with her imminent execution—and the knowledge that she is innocent. As Li Li's death sentence looms, she finds solace in her family's unconditional love and the unlikely friends she makes in prison, strengthening her resolve to uncover the truth about herself before her time is up.

Equal parts tragic and hopeful, 15 Grams stands as both historical recollection and existential discovery—simultaneously transporting readers to a long-forgotten, more communal Singapore and taking them through the moral complexities of Li Li's journey as she finds dignity in her pursuit of truth, and peace in her situation.

A Mild Case of Mass Hysteria

A satire about a curious mass hysteria gripping Singaporean men in 1967

In 1967, Singapore, over 500 men end up in hospitals seeking treatment for a phantom condition—their manhood is shrinking.

Against this backdrop are three young men dealing with the mass hysteria. There is Su Tang, a newbie gangster operating in Chinatown. He falls in love with Yin, a hooker who belongs to Ang Hor Tiap, the only all-women gang known in Singapore. But she rebuffs his advances. There is Wee Tiong, a young doctor recently returned from his medical studies in the UK. Yet to come out of the closet, he struggles to live up to his mother's wishes for him to find a nice girl to settle down with before her death. And there is James Yang, a young layabout conscripted into the army. Resentful of the regimented life at first, he finds his purpose in the machismo of guns and drills.

Colony

A colony of ants. A saga of humanity.

In the bustling and highly hierarchical world of ants, there is only one purpose for mating: to ensure the survival of the colony. Two queen ants—Queen Gegana and Queen Darojak—compete to become the alpha; the old one refuses to step down, while the young one vies for power. The inevitable battle between these two factions tears the colony apart at its core. Colony is a fable set in an underground world of insects—a world so small it is almost invisible, yet it is in fact massive, intricate, and meticulously structured. It is a mirror to the power plays and intrigues of the human world.

Love Between the Lines

Daisy Jones & The Six meets No Hard Feelings in this contemporary romance retelling of the Taming of the Shrew set in Manila

Katharina Bautista is thirty-seven, newly unemployed, recently un-engaged, and one bad week away from becoming her brother's permanent responsibility.

No job. No savings. No plan.

Just a talent for blowing up her own life and calling it 'character development'.

Nick Malvar, frontman of indie band Word Warlords, has been in love with his best friend's older sister since high school.

So when Katha shows up at his doorstep—dishevelled and gloriously single—Nick sees his chance. Katha sees a mistake waiting to happen.

She doesn't need a romance. She needs stability. Reinvention. Possibly therapy. What she does definitely does not need is a younger man with a guitar, a hero complex, and a long-standing crush he's suddenly very interested in acting on. But Nick isn't here to tame her. He just won't let her disappear.

And as any good Shakespearean heroine knows: the battle of wills is only the beginning.

What the Tongue Remembers

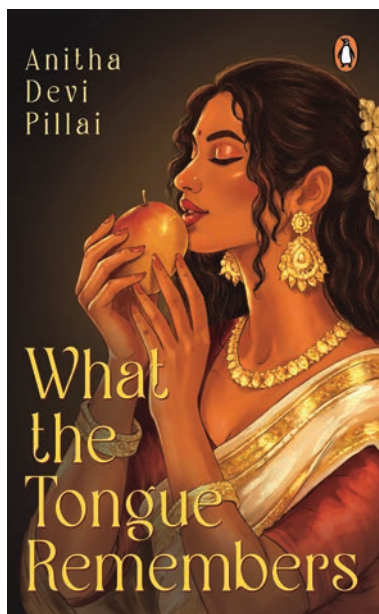

The world would rather forget but time cannot erase what the tongue remembers

Jealousy, longing, betrayal, and faith simmer in a tantalizing collection of eleven short stories of Malayalee women in Singapore, each at a crossroads in life, each stirring a pot of nostalgia and desire as they prepare comforting dishes for their loved ones.

In the kitchens of the meticulous Anusha Menon, the fearless Chellamma, and the gentle Aysha Rahman, the scent of Kerala's rich culinary heritage lingers through recipes passed down through generations, spices carrying whispers of home. And in another corner of the city, Lilykutty Verghese holds the last hours of her marriage tenderly, learning that endings have their own kind of hunger.

Yet, as their hands craft meals steeped in tradition, their hearts wrestle with unfulfilled cravings. No dish, no matter how lovingly prepared, can quell their deepest hunger—the hunger to love and to be loved.

Agnès

A patchwork of friendship and sisterhood, injustice and betrayal, love and death woven together from the fraying threads of an awakening Malaya

The year is 1914 and the fissures of war are spreading across Europe. A Russian cruiser, Zhemtchug, is sunk off the coast of Penang by the German warship Emden. From amid the wreckage, a local fisherman and his son rescue a baby and deliver her to the Sisters at the Convent Light Street.

Named Agnès, for she is holy and pure, the orphan grows into an intelligent and rebellious spirit. But no matter where or who she runs to, her past lurks, draws her back in, as she grapples with finding herself—and enduring happiness.

Buried deep within Agnès is loss and an intense yearning to belong. When she is offered a chance at building a life anew, will she find the fortitude to embrace it?

Lies We Live With

In a world built on narratives, the one who controls the story wins

What happens when a manipulator isn't a distant boss or a stranger in a crowd, but the person sitting beside you at dinner . . . sharing your last name?

Your ability to deceive others while escaping consequence is impressive. But doesn't the burden of all those lies ever make you stumble?

Gideon returns to this question in the wake of yet another mess orchestrated by his sibling, Charm. The auction world she infiltrates is ruthless and lucrative, and she quickly learns to exploit it, bending its rules to build a gallery, a name, and a legacy.

No one is off-limits. Friends, rivals, mentors, and even family become collateral damage. Gideon is pulled deeper into her orbit, and the line between complicity and survival blurs, forcing him to confront the cost of his silence.

Lies We Live With is a sharp exploration of family, class, and identity, exposing the hidden violence of manipulation and the loneliness beneath intently constructed lives.

How Women Talk Power

Power is what you make of it

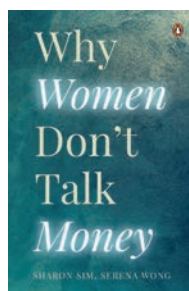

Power is a subject that women rarely speak about comfortably. Yet across eighteen raw and unfiltered conversations with women leaders, a messy mosaic emerges—complex, contradictory, and compelling.

Different stories across multiple spectrums: a scientist-turned-CEO who sold her company four times over, navigating corporate giants twice her age. Executives who travelled days after childbirth while redefining what leadership looks like. Women who walked into rooms of 200 people and instinctively knew who mattered.

Women define power through connection and influence, not dominance. Power is not a weapon; it is a relationship.

This book is for women ready to redefine power on their own terms and men who understand that the world is a better place when both hold the reins.

Maximum Purpose, Maximum Profit

Why Steward Leadership Is the Answer

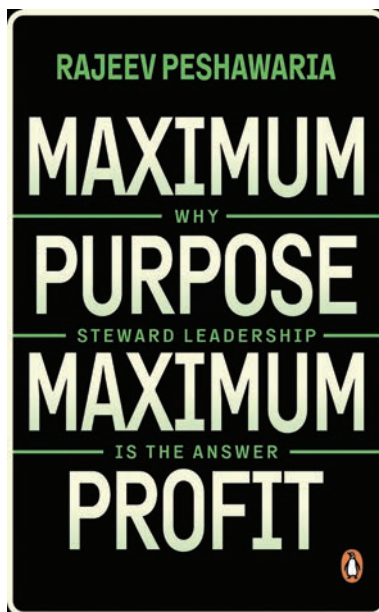

A playbook for businesses to propel profitable growth by solving climate and social problems

Everyone's naked. Universal connectivity coupled with powerful AI is making everything transparent and everyone vulnerable. Geoeconomic fragmentation, climate change, and social inequality are worse than ever.

In this new world, how can we ensure profitable growth and business longevity? How can we achieve environmental and social sustainability without sacrificing profits or material self-interest?

Current approaches like ESG and Milton Friedman's doctrine of solely maximizing profits are proving ineffective. We need a new model; for long-term viability, both business and sustainability must be profitable. The winning strategy for both objectives is steward leadership—doing well by doing good.

Aung San Suu Kyi

The Realities of Power in Burma's Authoritarian Legacy

The conflict lies between the entrenched authoritarian ideology of 'might is right'—which legitimizes power through coercion and military dominance—and Aung San Suu Kyi's vision of a spiritual revolution

For more than three decades, Burma's political prisoners, activists, and visionaries have embodied moral courage in defying authoritarian repression and unjust laws. At the forefront of this moral struggle stands Aung San Suu Kyi.

This book undertakes a philosophical exploration of Aung San Suu Kyi's political thought through close observation of her political journey from 2012 to 2020. The study challenges simplistic portrayals and explores whether Aung San Suu Kyi's principled leadership reflects not a betrayal of liberal ideals, but rather the articulation of a distinctively Burmese path towards peace and justice. It presents a deeply contextual account of moral courage, just law, and an uncorrupted society as essential elements in Burma's ongoing quest for federal democracy and decentralized governance.

A Cup of Kindness

A look into why kindness belongs in leadership, and the human cost of leaving it out

Kindness is often dismissed in the workplace. It is seen as soft, naïve, even weak. But what if it's the actual missing link in leadership, culture, and the emotional health of teams?

A Cup of Kindness invites readers into a reflective, sometimes raw, and always real exploration of what happens when kindness is present, and what unfolds when it is not. Drawn on lived experience, coaching insight, observed intelligence, and organizational reality, this book makes a powerful case for reclaiming kindness as a leadership strength.

With stories that cut across race, gender, faith, ambition, and emotional labour, it explores kindness with raw honesty. Through accessible language and honest reflection, it unpacks everyday interactions from how we communicate, set boundaries, and navigate ego or exhaustion.

A Cup of Kindness doesn't offer quick fixes, but honesty, perspective, and the pause we all need.

Who Told You You Couldn't?

Reclaim Your Voice, Lead With Audacity

A bold and vulnerable collection of real-world lessons and shattered ceilings, written to empower those who've been underestimated or overlooked, or are too afraid to dream out loud

Who Told You You Couldn't? is part memoir, part manifesto—a personal rebellion against the inner and outer voices that tell us we're not ready, not enough, or not allowed.

Told in four parts, this book weaves together raw personal stories, untold global narratives, and empowering frameworks to challenge the lie that you have to wait to be chosen. From burnout to boldness, rejection to quiet revolutions, it's a fiercely honest, deeply hopeful invitation to rise before you're ready, speak before you're certain, and lead before anyone hands you permission. Because the question was never really who told you you couldn't? It's what will you do now that you know you can?

The Almost Prime Minister

A reflection on hope, heartbreak, resilience, and the fight for a future where people, not power, come first

This is a political memoir—a record of my political journey that has never been told anywhere before. A story of an obstructed victory on a journey of no backing down. It is also the tale of a nation whose people are striving to change their own future.

I am Pita Limjaroenrat, the one chosen by the people, but I never became Prime Minister. In this book, I tell the story—from ‘Dissolution of Parliament to Dissolution of the Party’.

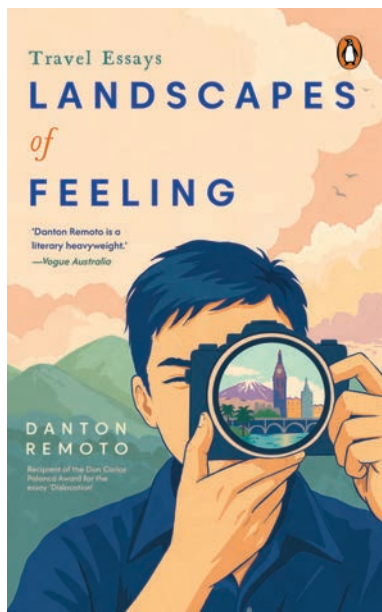

Diving into the confrontation with ‘legal warfare’ and various ‘anti-majority mechanisms’ that obstructed the will of the people, The Almost Prime Minister captures the downfall of the party the people trusted. It is a story filled with tests of faith, proof of commitment to principles, and a vital lesson in Thai democracy during a time of transition.

Landscapes of Feeling

Travel Essays

Travel essays on the forgotten places of memory and on the blazing present, written with elegance and élan

This book gathers the travel essays that Danton Remoto has written in the last thirty years. He writes about the Philippines and Vietnam, the United States and the United Kingdom, Australia and Malaysia using the lens of memory. The essays are vivid and fresh, as if the places are being seen for the first time. Here is London during the time of Thatcher, and London thirty years later; the Philippines in its times of ferment; the campuses and cities of the United States; the kampung and megamalls of Kuala Lumpur. There is a memorable gallery of characters: overseas Filipino workers pining for home, young men and women striding into their destinies, foreigners in another country. Issues of race, class, and the diaspora are pervasive in these essays, but in Danton Remoto's trademark style: light but not lightweight, conversational and breezy.

Nurturing the Nurturer

Mindfulness, Sleep, and the Art of Caring Without Losing Yourself

What happens when the person who gives the most has nothing left to give?

As Asia's population ages, a silent caregiving crisis is unfolding. Many of us will, at some point, care for someone we love. We are taught to serve dutifully, to endure and to be strong. But rarely are we taught how to rest or care for ourselves without guilt.

Nurturing the Nurturer is a compassionate guide for anyone carrying the unseen weight of caregiving. Eric Lim, one of Singapore's leading mindfulness experts, explores the intricacies of love, loss, and resilience with honesty.

At just twenty-four, Eric became his father's caregiver, who suffered from a series of strokes and later developed vascular dementia. For nearly six years, he navigated the emotional and physical toll of caring for a parent—while struggling not to lose himself in the process.

Blending personal experience with science-backed insights on mindfulness and sleep wellness, this book offers a path beyond survival mode. It examines the hidden cost of caregiving in Asian cultures, where duty is prized, and rest is seen as weakness.

Kintsugi

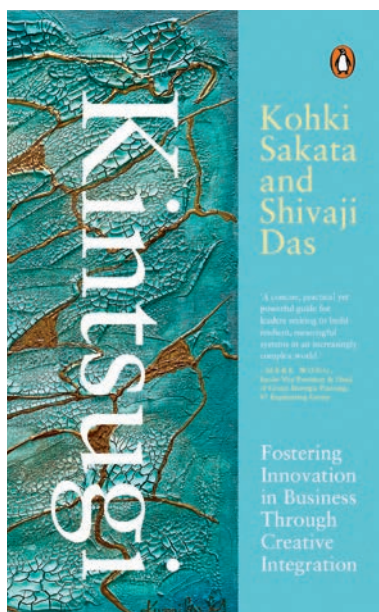

Fostering Innovation in Business through Creative Integration

The future belongs not to those who destroy the past, but those who mend it

In an era obsessed with disruption, we are often told that progress requires tearing down the old to make way for the new. But what if the most powerful form of innovation is not destruction, but repair?

Kintsugi introduces a new way of thinking about growth, strategy, and transformation, inspired by the Japanese art of repairing broken pottery with gold. In kintsugi, the crack is not hidden; it is highlighted, turning fracture into strength and beauty. This book argues that the same philosophy is increasingly shaping the most successful innovations of the twenty-first century.

Drawing on rich case studies and practical insights from business strategy and regional development, the authors present ‘creative integration’ as a new paradigm for innovation. In a world defined by change, pressure, and disruption, the challenge is no longer simply to invent something new, but to reconnect what has been separated, and Kintsugi offers leaders a powerful framework for doing exactly that.

Women of POWERS

25 Minds That Spark Asia

Women of POWERS journeys across the vast and varied landscapes of Asia, from the beaches of Singapore to the mountains of Nepal. These are the stories of women whose passion for science rose above gender roles, cultural expectations, and the constraints of limited resources—illuminating paths where none existed before.

This collection pays tribute to extraordinary women in STEM whose curiosity reshaped our understanding of nature, medicine, energy, and human resilience. It talks of the molecular biologists who turned venom into healing compounds, the physicians who stood on conflicted borders to care for the displaced, the chemists who decoded the secrets of disease, and the engineers who reimagined the future of energy and sustainability.

This book is a reminder that brilliance does not emerge from privilege alone, but from courage, conviction, and the belief that science can build a better world for generations to come.

The Wellbeing Imperative

How Thriving People Drive High Performance

How science, systems, and self-awareness combine to turn wellbeing into a driver of performance

Most organizations say they care about their people. Then they design work that systematically depletes them and call it high performance.

Drawing on neuroscience, behavioural science, and the principles of Human and Organisational Performance (HOP), The Wellbeing Imperative dismantles the assumption that wellbeing is something employees must take care of themselves. Through case studies from offshore platforms, control rooms, mine sites, hospitals, and corporate environments, it introduces frameworks including the Six Drivers of Workplace Wellbeing, the Capacity Index for measuring what actually predicts performance, and strategies for building resilience at every level.

You cannot self-care your way out of a fundamentally broken system. This book is for leaders who are ready to stop managing the symptoms and start fixing the design. Because thriving people don't just feel better. They perform better. The organizations that understand this will own the future.

I Miss Feeling Like Me

Reclaiming Peace, Presence, and Meaning in a Noisy World

A gentle, hopeful journey back to yourself — through the noise, the masks, and the quiet ache of disconnection

If you've ever found yourself smiling on the outside while quietly struggling inside . . . this book is for you.

Maybe you've done everything 'right'. You followed the path, worked hard, made people proud. And yet, you lie awake at night wondering: Why does happiness still feel so far away?

I Miss Feeling Like Me gently names the hidden threats to happiness that often go unnoticed—burnout, perfectionism, emotional suppression, comparison, and more. Especially in Asian cultures where duty often outweighs desire, and silence is seen as strength.

Rooted in science but told with warmth, this isn't a self-help manual filled with pressure or grand promises. It's a compassionate companion to help you notice what's no longer working . . . and take small, soulful steps toward what might.

Single, Not Sorry

The Rise of Singledom, by Chance or by Choice

An open-hearted investigation into one of our time's greatest mysteries: Why are so many women single?

SINGLE, NOT SORRY is a collection of reported stories and personal reflections that explore why, in many parts of the world, women are choosing or finding themselves without a partner. It delves into dating trends that cause an ageing population, the way romantic comedies skewed millennials' perception of love, the nightmares of online dating, parasocial relationships, and shifting gender roles, among other things. It's a book radical in its ordinariness but popping with wit, nuanced observations, and meaningful conversations with women and experts around Asia. Through the lens of pop culture, religion, politics, and mental health, the book looks into why so many women have stopped looking for romantic love—and the thoughts, worries, and anxieties that come with this. It's not a self-help book, not a dating tutorial. Rather, it's about our ever-evolving idea of a happy ending.

Oh, Hack No

The Battle to Protect Your Digital Life

How to spot and stop cyber threats

Every click can be a potential trap in the hidden battle for your digital life. Oh, Hack No follows James, a rising social media influencer whose world collapses when hackers hijack his accounts and threaten his privacy.

Enter Amber, James's cybersecurity-savvy girlfriend, who understands that blunt warnings won't change his mind. With patience and tact, she slowly persuades James to rethink his careless online habits. Amber highlights his vulnerabilities—not with lectures, but by weaving relatable analogies into their everyday conversations. From comparing weak passwords to leaving a door unlocked to explaining AI-driven scams as digital pickpockets, she transforms complex threats into simple, eye-opening lessons. Through practical advice and small, manageable changes, Amber shows James how even the smallest steps can make a huge difference in protecting his data, privacy, and loved ones online.

This book blends real-world stories with actionable tips, using the engaging dialogues between Amber and James to simplify complex cybersecurity concepts.

Part 4 shows you how to bring it all to life—in meetings, emails, tough conversations, and everyday leadership moments.

If you've ever thought 'Why don't they get it?'—this is your wake-up call.

Because you're not as clear as you think. But you can be. And when you are, you'll lead faster, communicate smarter, and make sh*t happen.

Linda Anggrea

Linda Anggrea is an Indonesian entrepreneur and founder of Buttonsarves, a leading modest fashion brand that has grown from a small home-based venture into a recognized name in Southeast Asia.

She is known for her sharp business instincts, strong execution, and ability to identify underserved markets, particularly in the modest fashion space. Today, she continues to lead and expand her brand while leading as CEO of Modinity Group and advocating for women's independence and entrepreneurship.

Building While Becoming

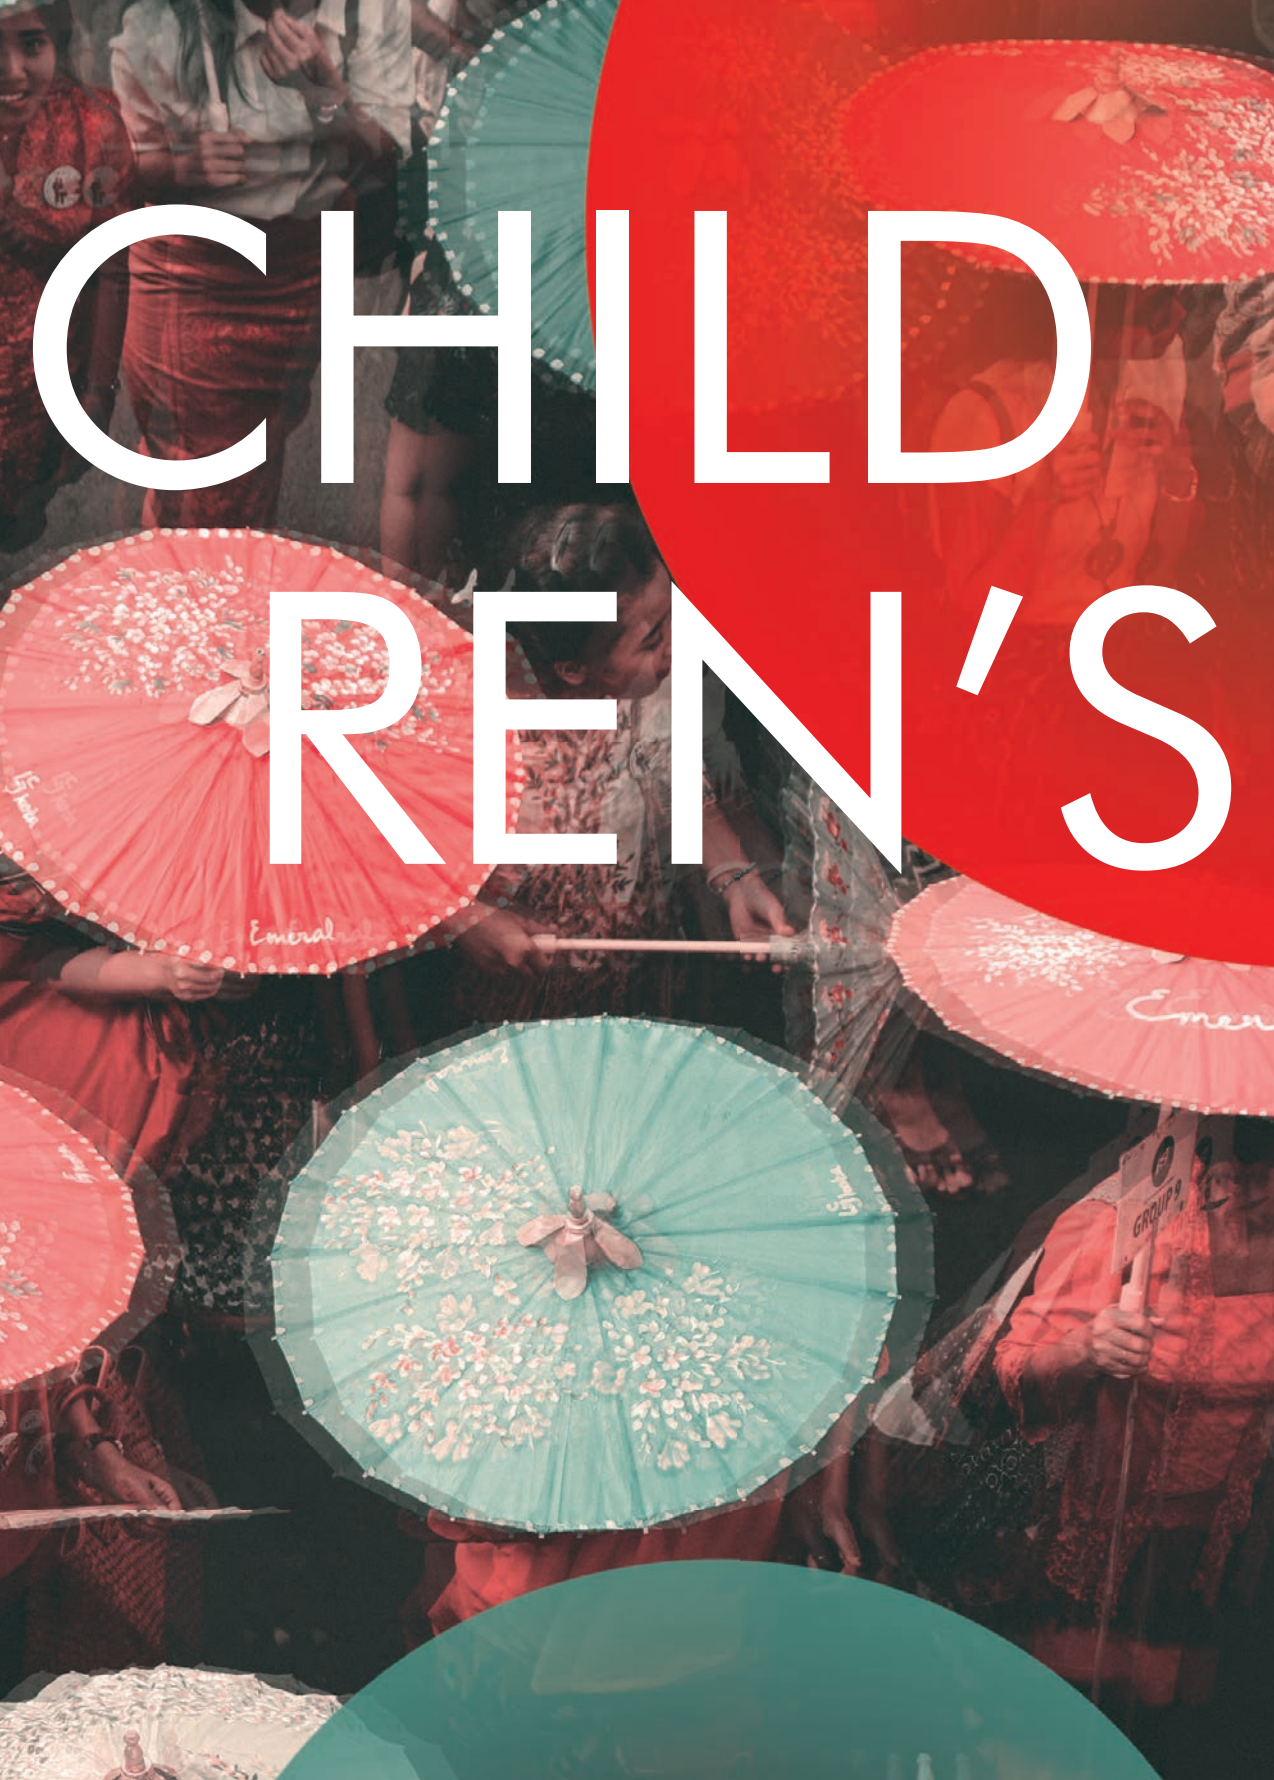

Building While Becoming is a personal and entrepreneurial narrative that traces Linda Anggrea's journey from a small riverside village in Indonesia to building a modern fashion brand in one of the world's largest Muslim markets.

Raised in an environment defined by scarcity and instability Linda learned discipline, independence, and resilience long before she understood business.

As she moved through larger cities and more competitive environments, she faced cultural gaps, economic pressure, and identity challenges. These experiences did not position her ahead; they forced her to catch up quickly and consistently.

The turning point came not from a formal strategy, but from observation—a simple realization that a massive, underserved market for modern modest fashion remained underdeveloped. With no prior experience in fashion, she began with a single product: a scarf made to her own standard.

Building While Becoming is not a story of starting ahead, but a story of catching up. It offers a grounded perspective on entrepreneurship, emphasizing that meaningful progress does not require perfect conditions—only clarity, consistency, and the willingness to move forward.
